

Valérie Chomarat

Interior architect Valérie Chomarat always creates designs that align with their surroundings. Not only does Project Bandol confirm that, but the house is also not far from her own childhood home. Loyal to her soft spot for sensual minimalism, she presented an inviting whole that was largely inspired by the dominant sea view nearby. By incorporating elongated openings and stretching out volumes, she managed to highlight the blue water. Throughout the entirety of the design, she reaffirmed her love for simplicity and singularity. Next to this, she continued her personal tradition of echoing natural colours when composing her own palette. This resulted in a consistent use of local stone for the flooring, worktops, and washbasins. There is no denying that the final version of the beautiful home is resting upon a foundation that consists of geography, climate, history, and purpose. Moreover, the interior architect showcased her eye for aesthetics by carefully selecting several artworks to complete the rooms. In the end, she arrived at a reaffirmation of her status as someone who chases serenity and tranquillity.
